WARNING ISSUES: If insurgent forces maintain their current momentum, the Sandinistas are likely to respond with a greater effort. This might well include a larger and more direct Cuban participation in direct combat with the insurgents.	2574

3. GUYANA President Hugh Desmond Hoyte's succession to power has been orderly and uneventful thus far. Prime Minister Hamilton Green has supported the President, apparently content to wait for his turn at power at some future time. The indications are that the Guyanese government may move toward a more moderate (or at least less radical) position both domestically and internationally.
The left-wing of the PNC believes that Hoyte and Green intend to remove most of the leftist ideologues now in the government.
 Most of these individuals represent channels of influence for the USSR/Cuba.
In order to demonstrate their more moderate orientation, Hoyte and Green might decide not to go ahead with the agreement to acquire Soviet helicopters.
Cheddi Jagan and his opposition People's Progressive Party (PPP) now have even less chance of gaining a meaningful share of power. The talks for a coalition government will probably drag on without offering the PPP any real concessions.
Thus far the Guyanese government has not signaled any intention to improve relations with the United States, but such overtures are likely.

4. PERU
There is no doubt that the USSR intends to offer President Garcia more economic and military assistance at attractive terms in an effort to expand its influence in Peru.
Garcia will probably accept increased trade and aid projects, especially as the terms are likely to be favorable, i.e., repayment can be made in "non-traditional" goods, such as fish meal.
In order to retain the support of the Peruvian military forces, the President will go on accepting Soviet equipment which is offered at generous terms.
Nevertheless, it is doubtful that this will lead to any real influence or leverage over President Garcia in the international arena.
Garcia intends to take a Third World, non-aligned position with a north vs. south orientation. If other countries were to match Soviet terms, President Garcia would probably switch in order to underscore his non-alignment.
In order to establish his credibility, he must keep his distance from the Soviet Union.
However, Garcia's options to Soviet aid are limited given Peru's dire economic condition, and he may accept Soviet offers to accept repayment by channeling assistance to Nicaragua.
WARNING ISSUES : Will the USSR be able to increase its influence in Peru by means of more favorable economic terms and assistance to the Garcia government?
